The Municipal Museum of Kampen moved to a new location in the historical centre of Kampen. Two former 16th and 18th-century Town Halls have been merged to one monumental late-Gothic/Renaissance building, providing accommodation for temporary exhibitions spaces, a museumcafe, a museum-shop, also a weddingroom and a museumstudio. The museum's permanent collection includes historic and contemporary art and objects, divided over four themes: Water, Religion, Royal House and Justice & Government. Kossmann.dejong is responsible for the overall museum concept, including the interior design and graphic identity. Kampen owes its reputation to its history as a hanseatic town and its religious life. An attempt has been made to create a link between past, present and between the town and the museum. In order to achieve this, Kossmann.dejong has developed a multimedia tour that takes visitors on a journey through the town's history, not only indoors but also venturing into the town itself. This makes it the very first museum in the Netherlands to present its cultural heritage in a single programme both inside and outside the museum. In order to do justice to the existing buildings, these former Town Halls are transformed into one museum in a most respectful way. A structure was designed which involved placing a new room inside the existing one, using a "box-in-box construction". This creates a surface for the collection to be displayed and strategic gaps through which the building's original features may be glimpsed. The people of Kampen are the central topic in the concept of the museum. They create a link between past, present and future, and also between the museum itself and the outside world. The museum's new identity is an extension of this concept.
